

Bridger R. Reed-Lewis

Bridger R. Reed-Lewis was born and raised in Palmer Alaska. Living in Anchorage and working as a Training, Research, and Development Specialist at The Center for Human Development at University of Anchorage Alaska. His responsibilities at CHD are assisting staff/facility in developing trainings, and projects ensuring proper representation to those within the disability community.

They're also hoping to be an aspiring author with their first book coming out soon. He also enjoys project management and excels in this task. Finally, Bridger has been hard at work speaking at conferences and other events around their lived experiences and has been enjoying meeting new people along the way.

Outside of work they enjoy disability advocacy and helping out within the community by assisting on boards along with attending community meetings on policy, and other important issues. At home he enjoys reading manga and watching anime along with casual gaming. His favorite game is Pokémon crystal and has played it over 30 times.

Bridger's future aspirations are to become an aspiring motivational speaker on diversity, and inclusion with an emphasis on disability, along with a nationally acclaimed author on books around disability, health care, and more. While working in some capacity for a disability focused organization assisting with the management, and development of services for those within Alaska.
